AUDITIONS TO BE HELD

A Smith College radio station may soon become a reality. President Davis has approved the plans which have been submitted to him, and has appointed Miss Mary H. Arbenz, assistant professor of Speech, as faculty adviser for the project.

An application for trial status has been submitted to IBS, the Intercollegiate Broadcasting System. Such a trial status means either that a college is contemplating opening a broadcasting station or that it actually has the equipment to broadcast. Smith College is in the first category.

Last week-end two representatives from Smith, Grace Marshall, 1948, and Marjorie Boselly, 1948, attended an IBS regional conference at Brown. David Linton, station relations manager for IBS and David Borst, technical manager, attended the conference, and representatives were able to discuss with them specific problems relating to radio on their own campuses. IBS will send to Smith transmitter designs and cost estimates.

IBS is a non-profit organization founded eleven years ago by two Brown students. It was incorporated in 1940. The purpose of IBS is to promote campus broadcasting and intercollegiate broadcasting in order to produce programs of high quality and special interest to college students. There is a membership of approximately fifty-five campus stations throughout the country.

Full membership status in IBS means that there is actually broadcasting activity from a campus station. All such members have a voice, through their regional council, to determine IBS policy. Membership in IBS and all of its consequent privileges are free of charge until actual broadcasting begins. After that time dues are paid to cover the costs of services to member stations. Technical information is supplied, and aid is given in obtaining advertising copy which will comply with the strict rulings of the organization. IBS acts as a clearing house for advertising and other technicalities, and as a protection against exploitation and legal loop-holes. They provide suggestions for such things as programming, timing, and schedule until the station is well started. Then they will supply transcriptions and albums of records. IBS also will help to find openings for people who wish to go into professional radio after college.

Marjorie Boselly, 1948, proposed manager of the Smith station has made the following statement of the aims and plans for the station: "The purpose in establishing a radio station at Smith College is two-fold. First, we believe that the Smith College student demands a type of radio directed toward her particular interests and that commercial radio fails to satisfy this need. Secondly, we believe that a college radio station offers a means of integrating curricular and extra-curricular activities of the campus, while at the same time giving those interested a chance to gain practical experience in the field of radio. With this purpose in mind, we propose to broadcast as many hours of uninterrupted classical music (Music 13 required listening) as possible. There will also be opportunity for student discussion on questions such as unlimited nights for juniors, as well as opportunity for complete freedom of expression of campus groups. In this latter instance, it must be understood that when a partisan view is presented, the other side will be presented also, since the radio station represents the views of the campus as a whole and not those of any one group."

Broadcasting facilities for the station have not yet been definitely arranged. A low voltage transmitter is to be installed on campus. The transmitter will be on the carrier current system, which means that programs will be transmitted by wire to campus houses only. No one off campus will be able to receive the broadcasts. However, it is possible to hire lines which will enable the station to transmit and receive broadcasts from other college campuses.

Organization of personnel for the station is still in a preliminary state. There will be a series of auditions for all people interested in any form of radio work, from announcing to disc-jockeying. The schedule for these auditions will be published in SCAN as soon as possible.
